

Operating Systems

Menuet OS (File System)

Names:

Abd-Elrhman Mohamed Abd-Elhady

2022513643

Ahmed Hassan Ahmed Ali

2203148

Flat File System Structure:

MenuetOS uses a flat file system structure, where all files and directories are stored in a single directory called `"/root"`. This structure is simple and efficient, and makes it easy to navigate and manage files and directories.

Ex:

You want to create a new file called `"example.txt"`. To do this, you would open the `"File Manager"` application, which displays the contents of the root directory (`/root`) in a window. Next, you would click on the `"New File"` button to create a new file, and type `"example.txt"` as the filename. The file would then be created in the root directory, and you would see it displayed in the File Manager window alongside any other files and directories that are stored in the root directory.

No Subdirectories:

Unlike many other operating systems, MenuetOS does not support subdirectories. This means that all files and directories must be stored in the same directory, making organization and management more challenging.

File and Directory Attributes:

It supports a variety of file and directory attributes, including read-only, hidden, system, and archive.

File System Drivers:

It supports a variety of file system drivers, including FAT16, FAT32, and ISO9660.

Memory File System:

It allows files and directories to be stored in memory rather than on disk which it can be useful for temporary files or for storing frequently accessed data that needs to be accessed quickly.

Limited File System Features:

It's flat file system structure and lack of subdirectories means that it has limited file system features compared to other operating systems.

Ex:

It does not support file permissions or symbolic links, and does not have a file system journal to prevent data loss in the event of a system crash.

File searching:

Since all files are stored in a single directory, searching for a file can be faster and easier than in other file system architectures as you can use the `"Find"` option in the File Manager application to search for a specific file by name.

File backups:

As all files are stored in a single directory, it's relatively easy to create a backup of all your files by simply copying the entire contents of the root directory to an external storage device.